Indomitable Energy. Notwithstanding the efforts of press writers to do justice to the theme of the push, en terprise, and indomitable energy with which Chicago's sons recoiled from that fearful blow which fell upon them just as one of the bitterest winters of later years was about to set in last fall, it is hardly possible to form an adequate idea of their characteristic 4 O'Clock P. M. courage as a whole without going into detail and selecting some individual instance by which to judge all. Innumerable instances have already been given; but there are the more interesting to record from the fact that they are the histories of what one man can do in the face of severe and crushing mifortune. Take for instance the case Ice Breaking Up. of Chas. E. Willett, the soap manufacturer. This young man had not been established in business for a great while when the sea evidences of his energy and industry. Not Lord Granville's Note on the Hey-Prairie. only that: but he was at the time of the disaster under contract to supply large quantities of his goods. The instant he could get on his premises after the fire he went to work to replace what he had lost, and that THE GERMANS AGAIN ARMING! was -everything. The first brick building put up on the north side of Chicago after stories high and with basement, and already the well known sign is to be seen "Fine Soups. Willett's"-just as though there had been no disaster, but only some alteration. When we consider that Mr. Willett started from the bottom three years years ago, and has built up his trade so as to rank as the second soap manufacturer in the west, we think we have given a fair sample of the wonderful yet every-day capacity of Chicago men. We were not personally acquainted with Mr. Willett, though we were well aware of the

IMPORTANT TO THAVELEUS.—It is a very important thing to the traveler, be he young or old, single or married, traveling alone, or with his family, to know how to travel with celerity and comfort, and where to put up at in the cities and towns which he makes his stopping places. The success of each day's work depends largely on the frame of day's work depends largely on the frame of mind and body a man is in when he leaves his hotel in the morning to undertake it.
